

Cased caddisfly larva live underwater in rivers or ponds and make cases for themselves by sticking together material such as stones, sand, sticks and leaves with a silk like substance made in glands close to their mouth. They use whatever is available to them - see what you can find to help this cased caddisfly make its home.

find to help this cased caddisfly make its home.

Cased caddisfly larva live underwater in rivers or ponds and make cases for themselves by sticking together material such as stones, sand, sticks and leaves with a silk like substance made in glands close to their mouth. They use whatever is available to them - see what you can

